Success story

The KING information system is a modern and flexible system used to manage and process up-to-date and consistent data of the Kooperativa insurance company. It includes a set of back-office activities that focus on collecting, processing and evaluating data on partners, insurance policies, claims reports, commissions and related activities.

It consists of several modules such as: Partner Management, Payments, Commissions, Products and Contract Documentation for life and non-life insurance companies, Financial Liabilities and Claims Management ...

Architecture

The horizontal structuring of the modules is ensured by a multi-layered architecture that allows the system to be divided into different layers. Each layer is independent and can be modified without affecting other layers, allowing the system to adapt to the different needs and requirements of the insurance company.

The modules have specific roles and responsibilities and allow each area to be addressed relatively independently.

The multi-layered architecture of the KING system includes the following layers:

- Presentation layer: It provides user interaction with the application
- Application Layer: This layer contains the business logic and data processing. It is shaded from the way data is stored and presented
- Data Layer: This layer is responsible for the secure storage and management of data

This architecture allows the system to be extended and maintained without downtime, including rapid adaptation to technology trends.
